

Melissa Bethel

Melissa recently joined Social Impact Exchange as a Senior Manager from the World Economic Forum, where she was responsible for driving and building strategic and meaningful engagement for the world's largest health and healthcare companies, working closely with senior executives of these organizations on their multi-year partnerships. Prior to the World Economic Forum, Melissa was a community health educator at New York Blood Center working on community outreach, partnership building, and educational efforts to recruit more donors to the largest national bone marrow registry, Be The Match. Melissa also has held roles in the Fiscal Governance program at the Open Society Foundations and the International Economics program at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Melissa graduated from the George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs, where she concentrated her studies in International Politics and Latin America.

Originally from North Carolina, Melissa loves cooking, traveling, history, and fitness and wellness.